Whisky

For centuries Ireland and Scotland have disputed the title of "true homeland of whisky".

On his return from a holy mission in the Middle East, St Patrick is said to have brought home the secret art of distillation.

During prohibition years in Canada, whisky was served in silver teapots to hotel guests amongst whom was Sir Winston Churchill.

*Today we bring you our exceptional whiskies,
having weathered both legends and history.*

Irish Whiskey selection – 4 cl

450 MUR

Slightly different to the Scottish process, the barley is dried in closed kilns without smoke, thus creating a final taste of pure malt. The tradition of triple distillation probably dates from the end of the prohibition, when the Irish sought to re-attract American consumers by producing a Whiskey lighter than the traditional ones.

Jamesons

Blend – Smooth and gently oily.

Kentucky Bourbon selection – 4 cl

450 MUR

Whiskies are produced all over North America due to the huge supply of grain but Bourbon must only be produced in Kentucky with at least 51% Indian corn. It will make Bourbon richer and sweeter. Rye is also added to give a bite to the whisky.

Kentucky – Jim Beam

White Label – melody body, big finish.

Kentucky – Benchmark

8 years – Bourbon that sets the standard by which all other Bourbons are measured.

Tennessee whiskey selection – 4 cl

450 MUR

Most of the other American Whiskies are called “Sour Mash”. They are made using a proportion of barley, which has already been used in a previous fermentation and from which the natural sugars have been removed.

Jack Daniel’s No.7
